Greedy Investors

I sympathize with the investors of Bishop, Baldwin, Rewald, Dillingham & Wong. However, with totally unrealistic promises of 20 and 50 percent interest, their motives were the same as Ronald Rewald's—greed.

As an aside, Rewald claims to have earned a degree from Marquette University in 1966. He would have had to take 12 credit hours of theology and 15 credit hours of philosophy, including the theory of ethics and applied ethics.

If Rewald says he played college football at Marquette, he went to school a long time—Marquette has not played college football since 1959. I am a 1967 graduate of Marquette.
